

Hello, My Favorite Kiddos!!!

This week we're going to take about pop art! "Pop" art stands for popular. It is all about artwork representing every day objects often using bright, bold colors. Pop art sculpture usually uses materials or size that changes the object to make it not usable for it's intended purpose. We'll talk more about that after you look at the pictures of examples. Today we're going to look at an artist named Claes Oldenburg. We're only going to look at his work about food today because we'll look at a painter tomorrow that paints food!

See what I mean about the size and material? We wouldn't eat the cushy material of the cake on the right. Look at the size of the cake compared to the man in the picture on the right. You know how I feel about ice cream. I LOVE ice cream. I can't eat that much ice cream! See how enormous it is on the top of that office building?

This week I want you to draw some food before you eat it. Any kind of food! Lots of food! You can draw a can of soup, a box of mac and cheese, a burger. Take a picture of it with your phone and send it to me! My email is sbentsen@sps186.org . We're going to learn about another artist that paints food tomorrow!

I miss you guys! Mrs. Glovinsky
